

Animal Shelter Project

A couple of weeks ago Isa sent me two videos of a family of foxes, who are living in her backyard. I found them very cute and decided to design a shelter for them.

Isa told me they live in a small space underneath the house and only come out when nobody is in the backyard. Based on these facts, I decided that a good shelter for them would be a small wooden house, similar to a dog house, which could be located in a quiet corner of the backyard where people are not going by so often. The house should have a rainproof roof so that the inside stay dry also in bad weather and should have some padding, like a blanket for example, in the inside to make it more comfortable.

I created a cardboard model of such a house using a dog house I had for one of my stuffed animals (see picture below).

I will not be able to really build the fox shelter, but if I were to do so, these are the materials I would need:

- Wood
- Nails
- Hammer
- Paint
- Rainproof material for the roof
- Blanket or pillow for the inside

I hope the baby foxes would feel comfortable in there with their mom.
